Biography

When Orianna threw a Saovine party at her estate after the events of The Night of Long Fangs, she invited Tegan to attend under the condition that he not touch a living being. Tegan attended the feast in his bat form while invisible. He moved through the crowd of attendants. Geralt of Rivia, who was acting as security for the feast, sensed Tegan's presence but did not stop him.

As the party reached its climax, Tegan poured wine over one of the women in attendance. Later, he found this same woman outside the estate, having been strangled, and then drank the dead woman's blood. When her body was discovered, the witcher investigated the situation and prepared to accuse someone.

If Geralt accused another person: Geralt then accused another person. Tegan was thus not revealed to Geralt, and the party resumed.
If Geralt accused Tegan: Geralt accused a katakan of the crime. At that, Orianna asked to speak with him in private. She asked Tegan to reveal himself, and he obliged, stating he had not touched any living being. When Orianna confirmed this by sniffing his mouth, she noted he reeked of stale blood. At that moment, a servant ran into the room, causing Tegan to quickly assume invisibility again. The servant reported that the sculptor Valentine had run from the estate, causing Tegan to perk up his ears.
